David Greenlaw

Dr. David Greenlaw is the founding and current President of Adventist University of Health Sciences. Dr. Greenlaw holds Baccalaureate, Master's, and Doctoral degrees in divinity. He has been a professor of religion at two colleges. For six years, he and his family lived in Zimbabwe, where he taught religion and ministerial education. In addition to leading Adventist University of Health Sciences since its inception, Dr. Greenlaw is a founding member of the American Consortium of Schools of Health Science, and is the current treasurer of the Adventist Association of Colleges and Universities. He is known for his vision, his entrepreneurial spirit, and his sense of humor. Understandably proud of the growth of the University, Dr. Greenlaw, a family man, is most proud of his wife, two daughters, and three grandchildren.
